

Reflections

Sunday, April 12, 2020

Monday, April 13, 2020

Note from Brian Dailey:

"Dr. Melinda Connor and I are Principle Investigators for a COVID19 study funded by Lightwave X39. Another way to attack the virus. Our group recently two prior studies recently completed and showed very great results."

Now something completely different, from Brian...

"If things get tight [at Monroe], we can ask Joe Gallenberger to go to a New York City street corner where 3-card Monty is going on and bring his dice. I can fix his kneecaps (for free - good Karma) as long as he brings in a few extra million! Out of the box thinking!"

We were made for these times

A note from Leslie led me to this article. It seems as wonderfully appropriate today as when it was written in 2001. A five minute read.

We were made for these times

<http://www.dailygood.org/story/1538/do-not-lose-heart-we-were-made-for-these-times/>

Talented

I spent some of this afternoon reading over the Participants Manual and Trainers Manual for our new online course for Outreach trainers, Awakening. It's based on Patty Ray Avalon's Inner States. The course's guiding principle is self-empowerment. Ellen Walker took on this project three weeks ago and it is now a reality ready to be used very soon. My hat's off to Ellen. It's a wonderful piece of work and I know our Outreach Trainers will have fun teaching it and participants will benefit greatly.

New Scenario

There have been those in the health care and government positions that have recently been talking about "rolling reentry." This is the concept that as things improve, we slowly approve of certain activities gradually increasing the ability of people to congregate, as it proves safe. That would also mean we have the ability to test quickly should something go wrong.

Another kind of scenario is "rolling quarantine." This is the idea that we may loosen activities up and tighten them again as outbreaks occur as the seasons turn cold.

Let's just say that makes scenario planning a bit difficult. Who would call these "rolling" events? The federal government seems reluctant to do so. Our governor is the likely person to do this.

Joy

Today the irises bloomed for the first time on our property. They are one of my favorite flowers. It is a joy to see them. I'm so pleased to see them the short time they are here.

Hat's off

Tom and Angie and been spending some "quality time" working on what our future might look like should A B C D and E scenarios befall us. They did some critical thinking and hard work. We're in good hands.

Ideas please

Leslie and I try to put out blogs that address what people are thinking about. If you have any thoughts on what might make a wonderful blog article based on something you are feeling or read. Please send it along to Leslie or me.

See you Tuesday,
Scott